BONDUELLE WORLDWIDE

Continually on the lookout for a safe, healthy and nutritionally balanced diet, consumers today are choosing diets where vegetables play an increasingly important role. Bonduelle's strategy is clear: to offer vegetables in every form and in every technology, all around the world via every distribution channel and under every brand. Present in 80 countries in the world's most productive agricultural regions, the company works with 4,600 partner producers that farm nearly 110,000 hectares of cropland. The group maintains cutting edge production processes at all of its 30 plants by tailoring investments to its sustainable development policy. Bonduelle is the undisputed global leader in processed vegetables.

BONDUELLE IN NORTH AMERICA—VEGETABLES THAT GROW HERE

Bonduelle, which has a solid foothold in North America with over 3,000 employees, operates eleven production sites in the most fertile regions of north eastern North America. The company markets an impressive array of processed vegetables under private label and proprietary brands such as the Bonduelle brand, which is renowned for its premium vegetables. Located close to major North American cities and backed by an experienced and motivated sales team, the Bonduelle North America Division is proud to provide its customers with top-quality vegetables and superior service. SUSTAINABLE DEVELOPMENT

Throughout the years, the key focus of the Bonduelle Group's strategy has consisted of establishing vegetables as the food of the future, in order to be recognized as "the world leader in promoting wellness through wholesome vegetables".

This approach is based on four pillars: respecting the planet and our commitments, promoting the development of the men and women who work for us, building our brands and our products in all of their forms, serving our customers.

Since 2003, Bonduelle has been a member of the United Nation's Global Compact initiative. This international pact urges member companies to implement 10 fundamental principles related to human rights, labor and environmental standards, and anti-corruption efforts.
